EXTRACTTaken from Collaborators by John Hodge

These notes are intended to help you understand the context of the drama.

John Hodge's play Collaborators is set in Moscow in 1938 and was first performed in London in 2011.

The play is based on an element of historical fact. Mikhail Bulgakov (1891–1940) was a Russian playwright whose stage version of The White Guard was banned from performance by the Soviet authorities. In Collaborators, we learn that Stalin has seen this play fifteen times and is a huge fan.

In the play, Bulgakov lives among dissidents and is watched closely by the secret police when he receives an unexpected commission to write a play about Stalin in honour of the dictator's forthcoming sixtieth birthday. Stalin emerges, threatening initially (in a dream) to smash a typewriter over Bulgakov's head, but then bizarrely offers to write the play while Bulgakov gets on with signing government papers in Stalin's name.

The play is in two Acts, and the extract consists of the whole of Act One.
